"WHERE'S HUDDLES?" presents the comical adventures of two families whose fathers, Ed Huddles and Bubba McCoy, are pro football stars. YOUR FUTURE

©1970 BY WESTERN PUBLISHING COMPANY, INC.

As an OCEANOGRAPHER

Exciting voyages to the bottom of the sea could become part of your work schedule if you choose to become an oceanographer! Using the principles of natural sciences, mathematics, and engineering, and employing special instruments, you would study the characteristics, movements, physical properties, and plant and animal life of the seas.

Most oceanographers specialize in one of the many branches of oceanography, such as biological, chemical, physical, or geological. Some are marine meteorologists, who study the processes by which the weather over the sea is generated. Others are oceanographic engineers and electronic specialists, who design and build systems and devices used in sea research, many working in private industry.

To become an oceanographer, you must be a college graduate, with at least a bachelor's degree with a major in oceanography, biology, mathematics, engineering, or one of the basic sciences. You must have a natural curiosity, a liking for the sciences and for detail work.

Because the importance of the oceans to the world's welfare has not been fully recognized until recently, oceanographers find exciting new fields opening up for them constantly, with very good pay.

As an INTERIOR DESIGNER AND DECORATOR

Through the magic of colors and materials, you will transform mere rooms and buildings into attractive convenient homes and offices, if you choose to become an interior designer and decorator. You will plan the arrangement and functional use of space and coordinate the furniture, floor coverings, drapes, lamps, and other accessories.

Some decorators and designers work on the interiors of ships and airplanes, and some design stage sets used for movies and television. Many are employed by large department and furniture stores, advising customers on decorating and designing, and some have positions with restaurant and hotel chains. Others work for architects, manufacturers of interior furnishings, or home-furnishing publications.

To become an interior designer and decorator, you must complete a course of two or three years at a recognized art school or institute or you must earn a bachelor's degree in college, with a major in designing and decorating. You must have artistic talent, imagination, good business judgment, and the ability to deal with people.

This field offers a variety of exciting areas of work. Salaries are generally good; and for the truly talented, there is no limit!
